An unofficial bulletin for the information of members of staff of Monash University

Vol. 5 NUMBER 36

MAY 1968

PROFESSORIAL APPOINTMENTS

CHAIR OF ZOOLOGY

Dr. James W. Warren has been appointed Professor of Zoology at Monash University. Dr. Warren came to Monash from the United States in 1962 as a Lecturer in the Department of Zoology, and became a Senior Lecturer in 1967. He has been Acting Professor of Zoology and Chairman of the Department of Zoology since early 1967 when the late Professor Jock Marshall was appointed to a Personal Chair.

Dr. Warren graduated as Bachelor of Arts in 1956, and as Doctor of Philosophy in the University of California at Los Angeles in 1961. In 1956 he was mammalogist with an ecological survey in the Burke Range in the arctic regions of Alaska. In 1961 he received a travel grant from the Society of Sigma XI to work with the major paleontological collections in the U.S.A.

Dr. Warren's primary research interests are in the origins of higher vertebrate categories and their early radiation, but he is also carrying out work on existing groups, for example, the study of the functional anatomy of the Australian 'death adder'. Other recent work has been on fish remains in Eastern Victoria which represent the earliest known vertebrates in Australia and are among the earliest representatives of crossopterygian fish so far recorded. Crossopterygii is a sub-class of fishes, nearly extinct, whose paired fins have an axis fringed with rays.

Dr. Warren has recently rediscovered a fossil location in northern Victoria which was originally discovered in 1890, but which has received no attention since then. A relatively large fauna of fish has now been recovered from the site which seems to be ideal for the early partially terrestrial vertebrates which have yet to be recorded from the southern hemisphere.

Under Dr. Warren Monash has become the only Australian University doing research in vertebrate paleontology, and so has become the depository for antarctic material. Few fossil vertebrates have ever been recorded in the Antarctic, although there are now a number of such specimens at Monash. Because a proper analysis of this material depends on understanding its relationships to the northern hemisphere faunas, Dr. Warren spent January and February of this year studying northern hemisphere collections in Britain and the United States.

DR. H.W. GARLICK

The University recently made changes in its legislation to permit the appointment of part-time professors in order to allow distinguished professional men in the community to become closely associated with the University and its work.

The first appointee under the new provision is Dr. H.W. Garlick, who has become a part-time professor in the Monash Department of Medicine at Prince Henry's Hospital. Dr. Garlick is at present Dean of Prince Henry's Hospital Clinical School and Honorary Physician to Inpatients at the Hospital. The Hospital itself is affiliated with Monash as one of its teaching hospitals. A Victorian, Dr. Garlick was born at Cranbourne and graduated as Bachelor of Medicine and Bachelor of Surgery at the University of Melbourne in 1941, and as Doctor of Medicine in 1949.

The University believes that in Medicine, Law, Education, Engineering, and possibly in other fields, there are professional men who by their standing in the community and their eminence in their profession can bring a great deal of value to the University, particularly in its teaching and in closer relations with the community. It is hoped that Dr. Garlick's appointment as a part-time professor will be followed from time to time by those of others eminent in the community who can contribute to the University's standing and development.

CENTRE OF SOUTHEAST ASIAN STUDIES

The Centre of Southeast Asian Studies has been effectively in existence for three years. It is now beginning to develop its own distinctive character and to make a name for itself, both within Australia and overseas. This year it has graduate students from Malaysia, Singapore, Indonesia and the U.S.A., and has had applicants from the Philippines and Britain.

This year, seventeen students are enrolled for M.A. and Ph.D. degrees under the auspices of the Centre, in the fields of History, Politics, Economics, Geography and the Indonesian and Malay section of the Department of Modern Languages. (More than half of these took their Bachelor's degrees at other universities.) These students are generally supervised within the relevant Departments, but attend Centre seminars and are assisted by the Centre in matters of travel to the area, acquisition of source materials and additional supervision by area specialists.

Currently, four students are overseas on field research. Among the thesis topics being studied are the Army in Indonesian politics, the ideological doctrines of the Indonesian Communist Party, several aspects of the problems of the Chinese in Indonesia, educational policies in British Malaya in the nineteenth century, nationalism in present-day Papua-New Guinea and chronicles of the eighteenth century Riau-Lingga sultanate.

One of the most important functions of the Centre is to bring together a concentration of specialists in the field of Southeast Asian studies which will attract both established scholars and potential students. Several recent staff appointments have greatly strengthened our resources in this regard. Anthropology now has Professor Michael Swift, who has worked in Negri Sembilan (Malaya) and the Minangkabau region of Indonesia, History has acquired Dr. Milton Osborne, one of Australia's very few Vietnamese-speaking specialists on the Indo-China region, who recently completed a thesis on the French administration of Vietnam and Cambodia in the nineteenth century. And with the appointment of the Research Director of the Centre, Mr. J.A.C. Mackie, Monash has further added to its collection of specialists on modern Indonesia.

Work-in-progress seminars are held fortnightly throughout the year at which graduate students in the Centre discuss their plans for research or read sections of their written work to their colleagues for mutual benefit. In addition, general seminars are held from time to time at which members of staff or visitors with interests in the region have spoken on a variety of topics. Last year's visitors included Soedjatmoko (the 1967 Dyason Lecturer from Indonesia, currently Indonesian Ambassador in Washington); Mr. Douglas Pyke, author of the standard work on the Viet-Cong; Professor Jonathan Mirsky and Major-General Hester from the U.S.A.

This year's seminars have embraced "Land Settlement Schemes in Malaya" by Professor Wikramatilleke, the Leverhulme visiting professor for 1968; "Early Trade Ceramics in the Malayan Archipelago" by Dr. Alastair Lamb; "Problems in Nationalist Historiography in Nineteenth Century Vietnam" by Dr. Milton Osborne; and "Intellectuals and the Legitimacy Problem under the New Order in Indonesia" by Dr. Herbert Feith.

Incidentally, any members of staff who would like to be notified of the general seminars should notify Mr. Mackie of their interest and they will be put on the mailing list for notices.

The Centre functions at the graduate level only as a co-ordinating body between the Departments concerned. Apart from the Research Director, it does not have its own staff as such, but draws on members of those Departments. Its most immediate task is to build up a collection of research materials so as to make possible a wide range of research projects in the Southeast Asian region. For example, a uniquely valuable collection of reports, statistics and pamphlet materials on the postwar economy of Indonesia was obtained at the end of last year, supplementing the extensive holdings of other materials on Indonesian politics.

One of our first major benefactions from a private donor was the offer of a scholarship tenable in the Centre by the George Hicks foundation. This has been awarded to Miss M.P.B. Manus of the History Department of the University of Indonesia, who will shortly arrive to commence work for a Ph.D. on seventeenth century Indonesian history. Cross-fertilisation of this kind through visits by students and staff from Asian universities is expected to play an increasingly important part in the Centre's activities.

THE RELIGIOUS CENTRE

The Religious Centre is to be dedicated and presented to the University by the Churches Committee for Tertiary Education on the afternoon of Sunday, 9th June, 1968.

The building is the result of interdenominational effort and is the first of its kind on any campus in Australia. It is hoped that staff and students of all faiths will use it for prayer and worship.

The Activities Officer will help and advise clubs on any problem relating to the organization of these activities.

MAIN LIBRARY

CLOSURE

To make room for more student places the Main Library will be transferring part of its stock to Level 4 of the Law School during the May vacation. Because of the move, the re-organization of the books left behind and the dismantling of shelves, as well as a shut-down of the air-conditioning system for repair and some carpet repairs, it will be necessary to close the Library from Thursday 23rd May to Monday 27th May inclusive. The Librarian regrets the inevitable inconvenience to users.

Work on Stage II of the Library building has commenced and the target date for completion is July 1969. Until it can be occupied, the Main Library periodicals (bound and unbound) with the Periodicals Department, as well as research books in French and German language and literature, will be in Law 4, and may be consulted or borrowed from there.

Staff and graduate students are reminded that all loans from the Main Library are to be returned on or before 22nd May 1968. If required they may be re-borrowed at any time during the preceding week.

VISITORS TO THE UNIVERSITY

LENINGRAD EXCHANGE SCHEME

It is planned that the senior staff member will spend from one to two months at the University being visited and the post-graduate student ten months. Monash's first visitors to Leningrad were Dr. George Ettershank, Senior Lecturer in Zoology, who spent a month in Leningrad at the end of 1967, and Miss Ann M. Livingston, a candidate for the M.A. degree working on Boris Pasternak's early poetry, who is there now.

SQUASH COACHING FOR BEGINNERS AND INEXPERIENCED PLAYERS

Would any staff members interested in group squash coaching, especially beginners and inexperienced players, contact P.F. Thomson (Civil Engineering), extension 2449. (Any interest from more experienced players would be welcome, too!)

The high cost of individual coaching makes group coaching attractive. Would staff members who find inconvenient that already available on Wednesday afternoons through the Squash Club support some alternative arrangement?

THE MONASH STAFF THEATRE GROUP

"THE DOCTOR'S DILEMMA"

The Monash Staff Theatre Group announces its next production: "The Doctor's Dilemma" by George Bernard Shaw which will be played in the Alexander Theatre at Monash from Wednesday, June 12th, to Saturday, June 15th, at 8 p.m.

Labelled a "tragedy" by its author, "The Doctor's Dilemma" has nevertheless proved to be a highly amusing exposure of medical ethics and motives. This is largely due to Shaw's witty dialogue and his insight into character and situation.

Can it be said that the dilemmas discussed by Shaw, sixty-five years ago, have been solved today? This is hardly so, when doctors and lawyers are even now arguing about the ethics of 'spare-part' surgery.

Monash University Staff are urged to support their own dramatic society. Become an active participant or else a subscribing playgoer! The Honorary Secretary, Mrs. Barbara Calton (extension 2131) will answer all inquiries.

The next play-reading will be on Monday 3rd June at 8 p.m. at the Vice-Chancellor's House. Please contact Laura Brogan (759.2226) for further particulars.
